

“Over the years I have advertised horses, tack, and one tongue-in-cheek “ISO Gentleman Farmer.”

In total, I have bought or sold, through The Equiery, six horses, three saddles, two horse trailers, found our vet, farrier, saddle fitter, hay, farm help, tractor, jumps – and, most recently a new farmette (sadly minus the farmer).

One specific instance jumps out (pun intended): I advertised a lovely Thoroughbred Gelding for sale. I placed the Equiery ad and one of the associates emailed back and asked if I wanted to run the ad on-line immediately for a very minor fee. I said yes, of course. The ad went live the next day (a Tuesday). On Wednesday I received a call from a gentleman interested in a dressage horse (the horse was advertised as a field hunter/event horse so he “qualified” for introductory level dressage due to his balanced seat training). On Thursday we did the test ride. On Friday I delivered the horse. When the print ad came out I received ten calls about the same gelding. Only wish I could have cloned him.

Outside of the classified section (which I am a huge fan), I find the articles and information to be timely, well presented and written, smart and savvy. The Equiery is most definitely the best resource for horses and horse people.”
